ST. LOUIS, MO – United Sovereign Americans supports Texas state Representative Mike Schofield in his bill protecting Texas elections against federalization. The founders of our nation recognized the supremacy of the state legislatures in setting time, place, and manner of elections, and as well recognized the right and responsibility of Congress to intervene from time to time and ensure the legitimacy and validity of elections for representatives in the federal government in the House of Representatives and in the US Senate.

This structure is the best way to protect American sovereignty on an individual and national basis, and United Sovereign Americans is firmly opposed to any effort to either federalize our elections, or remove federal oversight.

Additionally, DOGE has been exposing the inefficiencies and inabilities of government to manage large volumes of personal identifying information of American citizens, track payments and authorizations, and track the verification of citizenship through Social Security and other federal databases. The risk, therefore, of federalizing what is a distributed system and centralizing it into the hands of a few in Washington, is a further defilement of critical infrastructure already in dire need of repair.

The states are responsible to the federal government for administering legally valid elections and thereby authorizing legitimate representatives to federal government on behalf of the citizens of their state. State officials who fail to adhere to this legal standard can be held accountable under federal criminal law for doing so.

Transferring power and control over our entire election system to a small handful of bureaucrats in Washington DC and asking them in place of the states, who fundamentally have their own interests at heart, to administer elections on behalf of everyone would eventually turn out to have been a dire mistake.
